The FRIGHTENED BOOL

"Papacitol Papacitol!" Little Pancho Vanilla called breathlessly, as he ran up to the meadow where his father was watching a big bull grazing.

"Ooooo!" he gasped with admiration at the sight of the animal. "That ees the bool that Señor Carlos, the boolfighter from Spain, is going to fight at the fiesta tomorrow!"

"Phaw!" Papacito snorted with disdain. "I have handled one hundred beeger ones than heem in my time! I am not called the most famous boolfighter in all of Chilivania for nothing!"

"That ees what I told Señor Carlos at the hotel not an hour ago!" Little Pancho said triumphantly. "And he was so impressed he sent me to ask you to go in the ring weeth heem tomorrow to help fight thees bool!"

Papacito's large Adam's apple bobbed up and down with alarm as he heard the news. He swallowed with great difficulty. "Uh, you shouldn't have said that!" he managed to gasp. "My good boolfighter's suit ees in the laundry. I would have nothing to wear... so therefore, of course, I cannot go!" he concluded with relief.

"Oh, that's all right!" Little Pancho assured him. "I stopped at our house and told Mamacita about eet and she ees ironing the suit for you right now!"

As they were walking away from the meadow, the bull was amusing itself by chasing birds. One brave little woodpecker flew to the bull's horns and tapped on them angrily. RAT-TAT-TAT!

The bull was so startled and frightened by the peculiar noise that he ran and hid in a clump of bushes!

The next day Little Pancho walked proudly at Papacito's side down the street where guitars were playing and people were dancing to the merry rattle of castanets.

"The bool is coming!" The cry rang up and down the street as the bull's handlers came into view dragging the snorting animal behind them.

"This ees terrible!" Papacito thought to himself, fighting the mounting panic within his chest. "Everyone is going to discover that I am not really a great boolfighter, but only a great coward!" He shrugged his thin shoulders. "I cannot disappoint Little Pancho, so I weel try to fight thees bool! Eef I must, I must!"

Just then a startled cry ran through the crowd. Frightened by the noise and confusion around him, the bull had tugged at its rope and escaped! The people scurried to the safety of doorways, as the animal plunged this way and that. Soon the street was empty except for the bull, and Papacito, who was too frightened to move! The powerful beast lowered its head and thundered towards the helpless man, and then skidded to a stop within a few feet of him.

RAT-TAT-TAT! A familiar sound echoed along the street.

Thinking that the woodpecker had returned to peck at his horns again, the bull turned around, ran from the village, and was never seen again!

All the people in town crowded around Papacito and complimented him for being so brave that he could frighten a bull away just by staring him in the eyes!

Little Pancho was so proud of his Papacito that he almost popped the buttons on his red-flowered shirt!

Papacito was very surprised and pleased with himself, and no one ever knew that it was the sound of his bony knees knocking together with fear that had frightened the bull away!
